THE 1984 CHILHOWEAN

Maryville College
Maryville, Tennessee

Whether you're brand new or returning, the odds are pretty good that the sight of Hall I leaves a welcome-home lump in your throat. As you get closer, there's the new footbridge, and the newly renovated Willard House . . .

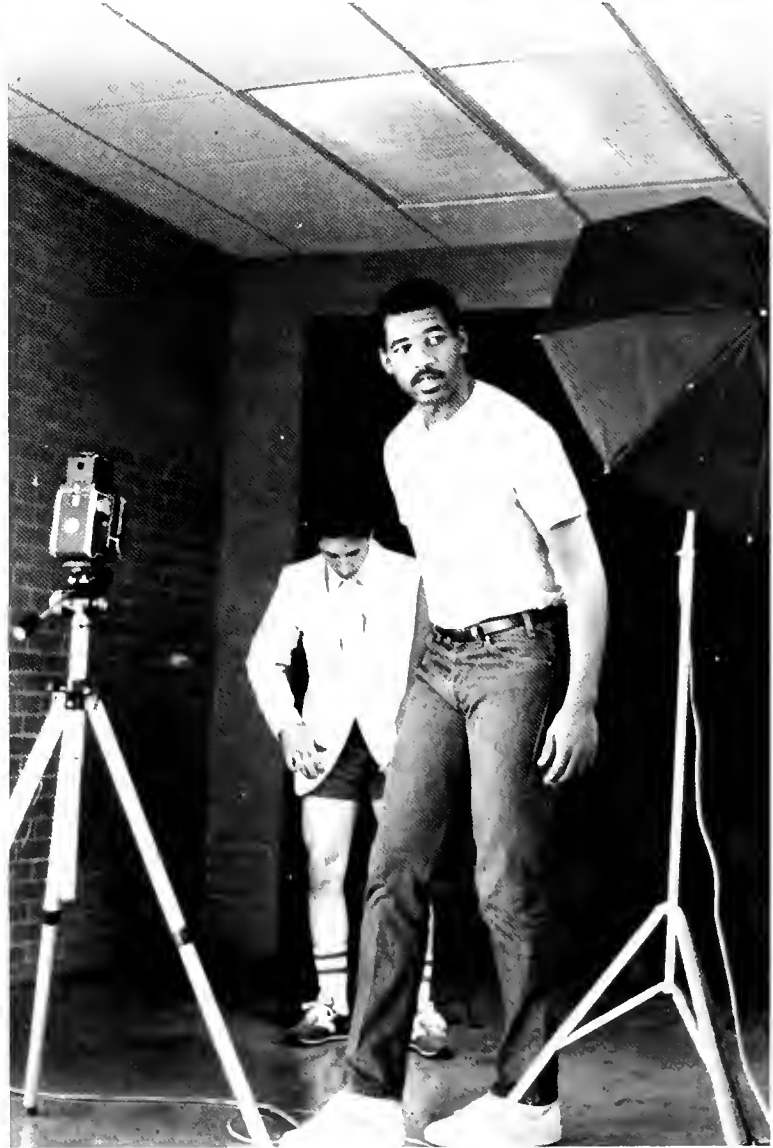

... THIS IS COLLEGE! Food lines, registration lines, bookstore lines! Hang in there, you'll catch on . . . just wait and see!

Now the stuff gets tough. Classes meeting, schedules. I just keep telling myself "the force is with me, the force is with me . . ." No mail, again. I wish Mom would send me some money . . .

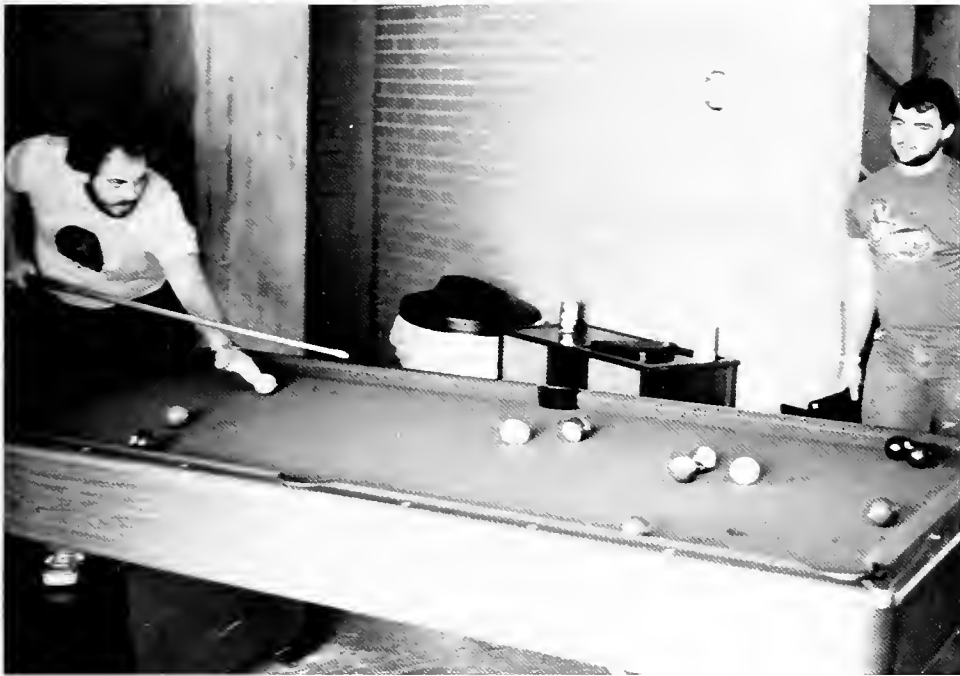

Whew! Finally, a letter from home! Hi, Mom, I'm climbing the mountains of academia . . . but why do I have to do it blindfolded?

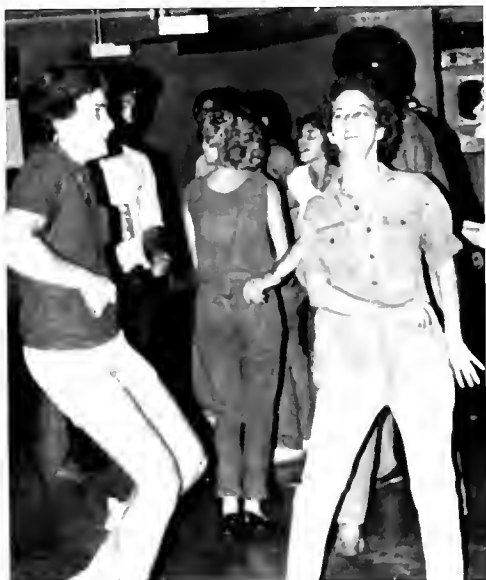

Jane: "Isn't this a lovely place?" Sharon: "Why, yes!" Jane and Sharon (together): "It's an enviable environment!"

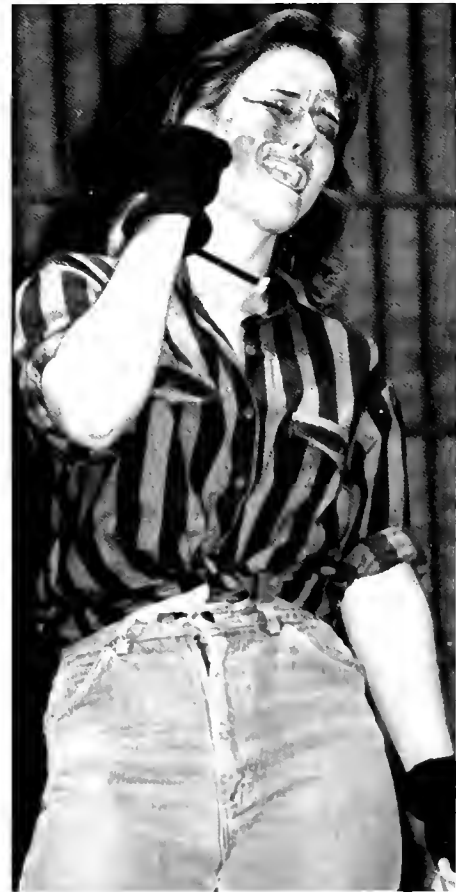

"We are gathered here to discuss the semester system . . . is there anything anyone would like to say?"

ORANGE AND GARNET NIGHT: Long awaited and long savored. What talent! What song! What laughter! But most of all, we all must agree . . . What fantastic judges. Yes, once again, let's hear it for our incredible judges!

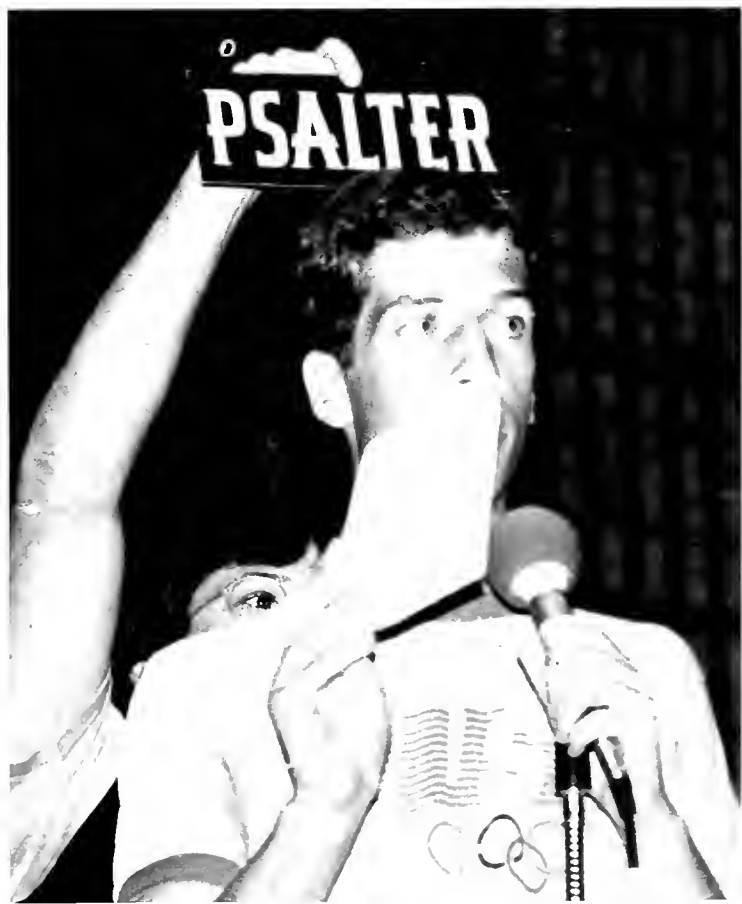

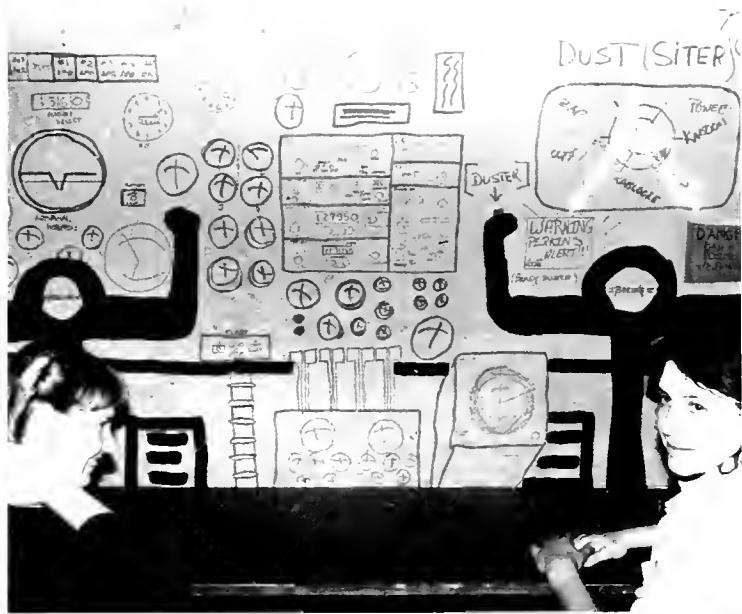

Jump! Dance! Take a break. Relax.
You've earned it. Get away for a while and BE.

Take a friend, Fly a kite. Take off your shoes and feel the earth (just so you'll remember what it feels like) . Lie down.
Close your eyes and dream . . .

Maryville College Statement of Purpose

Maryville College is a liberal arts, church-related college. It strives to be an instrument of liberation and growth for adults of all ages. Through its curriculum the College affirms the continuing value of a broad range of study in the humanities, the sciences, and the arts. Avoiding narrow specialization, the College aims to enhance career opportunities and develop a true sense of vocation. To prepare students for a world of uncertainty and accelerating change, the College seeks to stimulate purposeful inquiry, to encourage analytical thinking and effective expression, to foster discriminating aesthetic taste and sound judgement, to provide opportunity for developing personal values, and to nurture the deep concern for persons that leads to constructive action.

Founded by leaders of the Presbyterian/Reformed tradition, Maryville College is related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in a voluntary covenant. In an atmosphere of freedom and sensitivity, Maryville College bears witness to God's revelation in Jesus Christ who challenges all human beings to search for truth, to work for justice, to develop wisdom, and to become loving persons. Continuing in this vital faith, the College believes that it must listen attentively and humbly to all human voices so that it may hear the call of God no matter how God may speak.

Maryville College is, in essence, a community for learning. This community includes persons with a variety of interests, backgrounds, beliefs, and nationalities. The faculty, as a group of scholars committed to the preservation and advancement of knowledge, emphasize effective teaching and encourages supportive relationships with students. The students are challenged to grow in academic competence, personal and social maturity, and spiritual discernment and commitment. In such an atmosphere of openness and caring, lasting friendships are formed. Through caring for others on campus and sharing genuine concern for the world, and working to fulfill the College's purpose, directors, administration staff, faculty, and students strive to build and strengthen the human community.

Homecoming

1984 Homecoming Queen Amy Blanc with President Wayne Anderson.

Trivia: The Maryville College Edition

SENIOR COURT — Gloria Anaple escorted by Ed Welch. Sarah Covington and escort Tyrone Matthews. Julie Humpert escorted by Julio Pesiri. Kim Sperry escorted by Lindy Barile. Adrienne Ramsey escorted by Robert Loray.

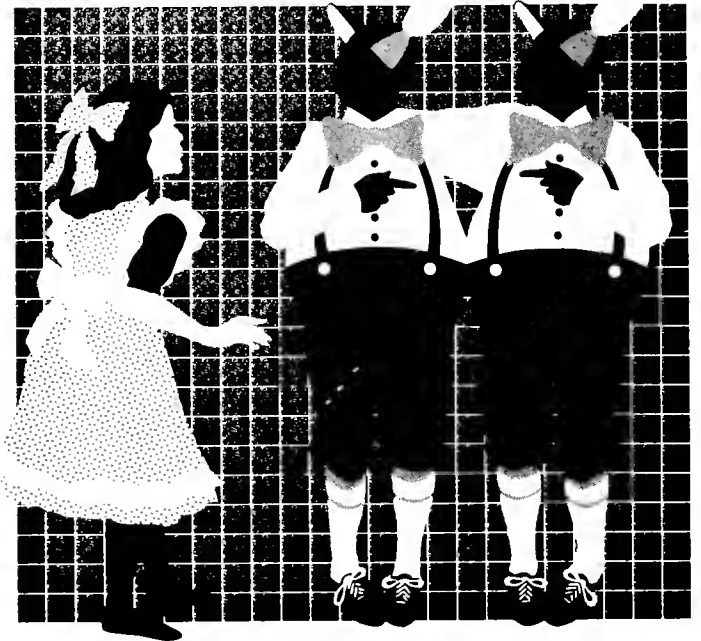

Junior Amy Ralston escorted by Jerry Vagnier. Bill Ramsey escorting Kristina Young. Mary Kleeman escorted by Tim Haas.

Homecoming this year was anything but trivial. The game itself took months to plan and collate, not to mention the actual game playing time of the event. Certainly the highlight of all those hours of planning was seeing the actual pursuit on the huge board that the Alumni Gym became. There were several other large scale events on campus. The folks of Lloyd Hall turned their building into an airplane, while Davis residents turned their abode into a towering inferno. The two homecoming games (soccer and football) made it an active and busy day to say the least. One can safely say that students and alumni alike all had a wonderful time Homecoming Weekend 1984.

For nuclear supremacy we stack our weapons high.
In the name of our security we've sentenced us to die.
And if not for those who follow, then for generations past.
We leave but one consolation: This war will be the last.

Who's Who

Members of Who's Who are selected by faculty, administration, and students. Criteria for selection are excellence in scholarship, leadership and participation in extracurricular activities and academic activities, and promise of future usefulness to business and society. He Loves His Job

This year was one of elections. And re-elections. And re-re-elections. The elections committee, headed by John Pritchard, had everything under control. And what a sense of duty they had! Each time a rumor befell the campus about a crooked election, out came the ballot box.

IMPRESSIONS

Impressions is the literary magazine of Maryville College. In an effort to encourage creative efforts, contributions are taken from any interested member of the campus community. Selections for the magazine are made by an editorial staff and are based on their originality and literary quality. To insure unbiased opinion in the selection process, all authors' names are removed from the entries prior to their consideration for publication. It is the hope of the staff that Impressions will give an accurate reflection of the college community as a creative force.

Nuclear Evening in New York

As the night falls, my knuckles lock as air turns to ice blue,
smoke sneaks out of the stove,
my breath is visible before me;
i rise, float, and sail about the room.

As static overcomes the newscaster,
words dissolve, separate, jumble, still, France and Italy call for ends to deployment, German protesters unite for two weeks in October.
some have not forgotten.

All over, the voices, you hear them:
"I love life, listen to me now, I'm telling you, I love life!"

Multiple disorderd tones, reiterating what it is that matters. Backs against walls, elubs against flesh, music goes on, words fill air unstunted, meaning: clear.

someone goes on singing,
somewhere a limping man swallows a half-filled glass of milk (first "food" to pass his lips in seventy-two hungry hours). he walks toward a beach in Latin America, and of all things, whistles.

*character taken from the short story The Half-Glass of Milk

Central American Blues

Thousands of leadened raindrops,
Shower helpless little crops.
There's light from the revolution—
But the reign never seems to stop.

Armored lions roam the jungle,
A woman and torch their guide.
An eagle soars above—
The lamb and the dove have died.

The natives beat their drums,
Hoping northern tribes will hear,
"The bear won't get our honey—It's the guerillas that we fear."

Salty tears, red streams,
purple hearts, shattered dreams.
Smokey skies, mourning eyes, nations cry, money buys.

Hate and greed, forgotten steeple,
facts and stats, forgotten people.
Peace and love, dusty now,
stop the machine, don't know how.

Pretends defends,
neighbors, friends.
Tragedy, hypocrisy,
man kind? make amends!

Statues and Crosses continue to weep,
an eagle flies in contradiction,
until Life is given a chance and killing a benediction. (Por favor)

SYLVIA (d. 1963)

Twenty,
and the hangman's noose—
made from an old silk scarf—didn't quite do it.
The bright bite of the razor blade,
the salty slap and swallow of the sea,
the whirling lights and shrill buzzers of hard white pills
didn't do it, either.

Thirty,
living alone in a cramped London flat
with two whining babes,
the pipes all frozen,
and one husband-gone-rat just left,
you turned to the oven—
not to bake,
but to seal the kitchen doors and windows, and lay your head like a trusting child's on the oven door opened flat as a mortician's slab.

That did it.

And all around your quite cold feet,
the coroner next morning
must surely have reported the jagged-bright shards of an old bell jar.

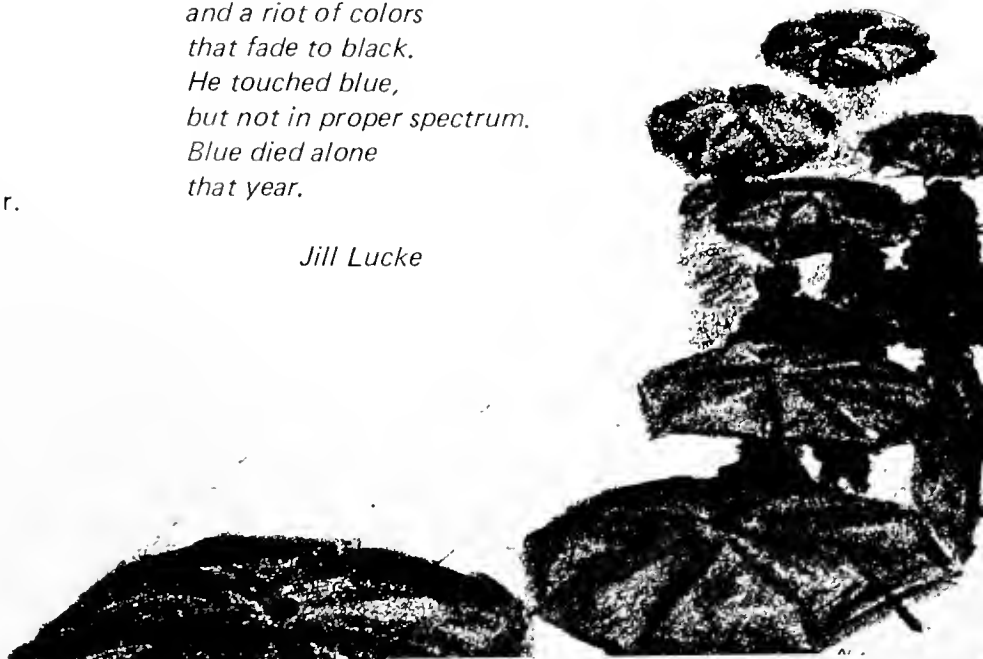

Peggy Millsaps

I am here.
The cup on the table
is not guilty.
These walls, pale,
Are not angry.
Even my hands, veined,
Fingers folded do not shout.
The fury must be inside.
Inside
It's tight as hell.
I cannot reach it.

Julie Humpert

*Tattered black umbrellas and funerals...
Will the rain never cease?
The sound of drops
on faded black cloth
ring
like clods of this bloody earth
on coffin lids.
There is no solace
here.
Echoes of a dying
bluesy trumpet, (Surely no angel ever played the blues)
three interlocking circles suspended on a chain,
and a riot of colors
that fade to black.
He touched blue,
but not in proper spectrum.
Blue died alone
that year.*

Early Season's Greetings!

I am writing to you from Tokyo to wish you the very best during exams and during the holiday season. I hope that everything will go exceptionally well for you.

Thanks to the Japan Society which is underwriting the expenses for this trip, I am working in Japan to arrange student and faculty exchange programs. I have met with officials from many colleges and universities here and I am genuinely excited about future prospects for exchange programs involving Maryville College faculty and students. I am also visiting many high schools to talk with counsellors and students with an eye toward attracting students to Maryville College.

Our exchange program at Kansai Gaidai, where Hubert Dixon and Mary Padget are enrolled this term, is going very well and I am looking forward to additional exchange programs of this caliber in the future.

With my very best personal wishes--and sayonara!

Sincerely,
Wayne

King Speaks at MC

by Pam Mathews

"We need to create a just society. . . . Instead of embracing hate, we have to embrace love," Martin Luther King III stated, resounding his late father's plea. King, vice president of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, was guest speaker of the Community Issues and Values Program November 29.

"This generation has to be . . . historically educated. People who do not know history are doomed to repeat it," King commented on the basis that the current generation knows little about the civil rights movement. Young people, by being informed will "make sure that what happened in the 60's never ever happens again.

As a child, he saw the civil rights movement evolve under the leadership of his father and remembers the violence in the 60's when he was prohibited from entering an amusement park or a fast food restaurant.

When he was ten years old, his father was slain by James Earl Ray. The principles of Dr. King were "formed as a child under the care and guidance of his grandfather," Martin Luther King Sr., who died several weeks ago.

In order to illustrate the harsh treatment of blacks, King recalled a story that his grandfather once told him.

A policeman who apparently wanted to harass a black man stopped King Sr. who was driving in the car with King Jr. The officer, addressing the elder King as "Boy," asked to see his license.

"Grandfather said to the officer, pointing to his right side (Martin Jr.), 'This is a boy. And I am a man.'" King stated. The officer was so stunned that a black man would retort [talk back] to him, that he just wrote the ticket and left.

King thought that his father would be pleased with the progress black people have accomplished, but "we've got a long way to go. Perhaps if he [Dr. King] were here, we would be farther along," he replied.

King emphasized that education should be a top priority for young people, for the most superior nation is not the one of the biggest bomb, but "the nation with the brightest minds. To have great ideas, we must have good minds, and to have good minds, we must have a strong academic foundation," he concluded and also stressed the importance of increasing spending on education rather than cutting it.

Christmas Memories

by Peggy Millsaps

I will never forget my seventh Christmas—not because of our new two-story house dazzling with decorations from top to bottom like the White House Christmas tree, nor because of the delicate porcelain Snow White doll my parents, under the guise of Santa Claus, gave me.

With frightening clarity, I remember my seventh Christmas because of what a classmate told me only days before.

This lisping, freckle-faced observer of world affairs told me, with the same clear-eyed certainty of purpose that garnered him consistent A's in show 'n' tell, that on Christmas day a vast and ruthless nation called Russia was going to attack the United States.

Russia would attack us with atomic bombs, he said, and when they'd devastated our major cities and taken our president hostage, they'd trundle off our grandparents to die in the woods, leave children to starve, slaughter our pets, and guard the streets with hot pitch forks. His list of atrocities ran on.

Not being much of a foreign affairs expert at that age and having found this boy to be absolutely reliable in everything he'd said up to that point, I never questioned his grim pronouncements. Nor did I talk to my parents, who might have been able to alleviate my fears.

I spent Christmas listening for the shriek of missiles. When, at bedtime, my street, and so far as I knew, the nation, were still intact, I figured we'd been mercifully spared and that I need never worry about the Russians again. My peaceful and circumscribed life adjusted back to its even keel of Walter Farley novels, Barbie dolls, and the Osmond Brothers. Nonetheless, that Christmas marked my first awareness of the Soviet Union—particularly, the Soviet Union as a potential threat to the United States.

I am a more astute observer of world affairs now. I am not so naive that I expect an all-out Soviet assault on Christmas day, but I need no precocious classmate or prophet of doom to tell me of the strained relationships between the United States and the Soviet Union. For the second time in my life, Christmas is tainted with what I thought were long-sleeping nuclear fears.

I have heard the newscasters, the politicians, the experts. I have seen excerpts from Soviet training films where the camera cuts artfully and terrifyingly depicts missile after missile shrieking across the television screen while a series of mushroom clouds go up in boiling black smoke.

In a very serious and grown up way, I am afraid.

I can tell my parents about my fears. I can tell my friends, I can tell the President.

But this time no one can alleviate my fears.

her eyes to rest. Joseph's shadow leans in the doorway. He's watching a billion stars twinkle all at once, and he thinks about being a young boy again: a boy climbing trees, teasing the camels, and afraid of the darkness. Joseph glances inside the barn to check on his new family sleeping peacefully on the hay, then turns back to the vast and silent night. He clears a place on the ground and sits down with his back against the doorway to keep watch with the moon, no longer afraid.

Julie Humpert

THE NON-STUDENT AFFAIRS AWARD

Imagine that very first Christmas morning. . . . It is very early. The sheep are still asleep over in the corner of the barn while the cows munch quietly on the hay. It smells kind of musty, like old wood and animals, but that doesn't bother Mary. Wrapped in Joseph's warm cloak, she lies in the warm hay, exhausted from the birth that took most of the night. Looking down at the newborn face of Jesus, wrinkled and red, as he shifts in her arms, she smiles contentedly and closes

To A Friend

The words run freely in my mind
yet paper,
the limp sheets set in front of me, erase my thoughts as though they were never there.
And I make so many futile attempts to express
those emotions of appreciation, that are so strongly built within me.
You've shown just what a friend can be,
yet I cannot help but feel afraid,
for though I feel,
and appreciate your sensitivity
and care,
I wonder if I am not building
something that is not there.
And now as I write my appreciation for what you have so far given,
I cannot help but crave more of your attention,
and I worry
that my greediness
will only cause you to turn away.

And so we have finally arrived. The final page, final deadline, and my last opportunity to put my mark on this book. It has been challenging, to say the least. It has been rewarding, for what it's worth. And it has been very difficult. I find myself feeling terribly sentimental and even the headaches don't seem as awful as they did while we were putting the book together.

After three years of working on the staff, I feel confident in saying that the old song is true . . . Maryville women do not drink!

Best Wishes to you all.

Enjoy!
